

Indiana's no call list is doing just fine. I don't ask for the telemarketers and I don't want them. Lets be honest and consider doing this and you will come out what people really think. Do a simple survey without loaded question like this

- 1.If you have been called by a telemarketer have you ever bought anything?
2. When a telemarketer called, have you ever said to yourself "Gee I am glad they called."

As far as I am concerned, they are nothing more than parasites on people who cannot say no.

If you make a national no call list, make it at least as restrictive as Indiana's.

You know something is wrong with it when a popular item on sale on TV is a device which will stop the telemarketers.
